

Spam Folder

I haven't updated my blog in forever. The last few months have just gotten away from me. I was sick over the summer with pneumonia. My mother had a major surgery and my dad was hospitalized for an illness. I made a major change in my work life. There is a new grandbaby on the way. These aren't excuses. Life just gets so busy.

Today was a fun family day. We had a picnic, played putt putt golf and stopped for ice cream on the way home. For the last hour or so I've been sitting on the couch catching up on some work email and creating the worlds most boring spreadsheet of network printers. My husband is quietly snoozing away in his recliner with the Cowboys/Broncos game on. It's kind of too late to take a nap so I figured I would clean out my Project Midlife Spam folder. I get notification emails regularly saying I have a comment on one of my posts. I would be flattered by the sheer volume of them but unfortunately most of them (Ok all of them) are junk. Usually I just select all of them and click Delete because most of the time they are ads for Viagra or Levitra but today for some reason I actually started reading them. I swear I didn't edit these...this is word for word. These are some of the email topics.
